

Action Planning

learning to love MySpace

It's today. We are trying to understand and function in the 2.0 world that is home to our young people.

Today's workshop has convinced you:

Web 2.0 is a healthy youth development strategy.

Now what? Create a mini action plan.

What is getting in the way?

What are the barriers to adopting Web 2.0 technologies in your youth-centered program, project or community?

Any opportunities?

Are there any people, resources, policies, groups, research that might help?

What can you do?

How can you or your program enable young people to access or use Web 2.0 technologies to develop in healthy ways? Consider yourself in multiple roles: professionally, as a parent/family member, as a vote/member of a community.

Make a commitment

Pick one of your ideas, opportunities or concerns and make a commitment to work on it.

Glynis Shea

Konopka Institute for Best Practices in Adolescent Health
Healthy Youth Development • Prevention Research Center