The number of senior citizens in the United States is quickly increasing and some estimates show that by the year 2030, roughly 20% of the population will be senior citizens. This aging population is expected to have a large effect on the country's health and social service systems. One way to lessen the blow is to promote healthy living practices in older adults. Program faculty will discuss life care services, state programs, and federal initiatives available to assist seniors and promote healthier lifestyles.
