

Domestic Violence as a Public Health Issue

Satellite Conference and Live Webcast

Tuesday, October 23, 2012, 2:00-4:00 p.m. (Central Time)
3:00-5:00 p.m. (Eastern) ■ 1:00-3:00 p.m. (Mountain) ■ 12:00-2:00 p.m. (Pacific)

Every year millions of women, men, and children are affected by some type of domestic violence. Victims of abuse experience physical, mental, and social consequences as a result of the violence. Abuse can even lead some to engage in negative health behaviors such as high-risk sexual behavior, substance abuse, and unhealthy lifestyle choices. Domestic violence is a serious problem that can have lasting, harmful effects on individuals, families, and communities. Program faculty will discuss more about these effects and provide insight on how prevention efforts can reduce violence.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES:

1. Explain the health consequences experienced by child and adult victims of domestic violence.
2. List societal costs related to the provision of health care services to victims of domestic violence.
3. Identify how to respond to patients affected by domestic violence.
4. Discuss model programs and best practices improving health care response to domestic violence.
