The “talk.” It’s probably one of the most dreaded conversations a parent has with their child. Parents are the best sexuality educators for their children, but may not always feel comfortable in that role. Program faculty aim to help make that conversation a little easier by introducing the curriculum: Bridging the Great Divide: Parents and Teens Communicating About Relationships. This easy to use resource provides tools to empower parents, educators, and social service providers by providing specific techniques and tools to open up communication, broach sensitive topics, and set rules and boundaries.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES:

1. Describe the impact parents/caregivers have on decision making regarding the sexual behavior of teens.
2. Identify and demonstrate at least three activities to enable more effective parent-teen communication.
3. Identify resources and access curriculum to train parents/caregivers in effective communication with teens.
