Program Objectives:

1. Review the variations in name and appearance of Electronic Nicotine Delivery Systems as well as the contents of the solution.
2. Review the American Academy of Pediatrics recent policy statement on Electronic Nicotine Delivery Systems (ENDS).
3. Review the recommended actions for pediatricians and other health care providers who work with children when discussing ENDS.
4. Review the environmental and poisoning hazards for children that are associated with electronic cigarettes and liquid nicotine, including pharmacokinetics, mechanism of toxicity, and toxic clinical effects of nicotine.

Electronic Nicotine Delivery Systems (ENDS), also known as electronic cigarettes, can have a profound impact on the health of children. Types of devices, ingredients, and the safety of these products can be confusing for pediatricians and other health care providers who work with children. The nature of these products can also create environmental and poisoning hazards for children that parents and providers may not be aware of. This program will provide an overview of various devices currently on the market, review the recently-published policy and recommendations from the American Academy of Pediatrics, and provide an overview of the potential for poisoning hazards including the toxic clinical effects of nicotine, in order to help child health care providers educate families and communities.
