Target Audience:

Public health employees, including clerical, nurses, social workers, clinicians, and other healthcare professionals, interested in learning about suicide awareness

June is Men's Health Month, and suicide is one of the top 10 ways men die in Alabama. Many of these deaths can be prevented by recognizing warning signs and risk factors for both men and women who are at risk for suicide. This program will provide healthcare professionals with evidence-based practices to intervene on behalf of individuals and their families with suicidal ideation.

Objectives

1. Participants will be able to recognize warning signs and risk factors for individuals at risk for suicide.
2. Participants will learn which people groups are most impacted by suicide.
3. Participants will be able to name at least 2 suicide prevention resources that are available 24/7.
