Teenage pregnancy rates are on a downward trend in recent years, despite national statistics stating one in three teenage girls will get pregnant before age 20. For now though, focus remains on finding out what is leading to the decline in teen pregnancies. Research points to prevention programs using evidence-based curricula. So, what are these programs, how do they work, and can they be applied to Title X clinic settings? Program faculty will provide those answers.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES

1. Define evidenced-based teen pregnancy prevention programs.
2. Identify characteristics of effective programs.
3. Describe the steps in developing a Behavior Determinant Intervention Logic Model.
4. Describe program fidelity and adaptation.
5. Identify resources for determining appropriate prevention programs for specific settings.
